Science (Psychology) / Coaching ScienceBachelor

Content Area PSYC

Description Sport and Exercise Psychology has proven to be a popular area of study in recent times with particular interest being centred on how psychology might enhance athlete performance at the elite level. Many nations now have sport psychologists as part of their sport medicine team at Olympic Games, recognising the importance of their skills in maximising individual performances at the highest possible level. This double degree provides training in both coaching science and psychology and is ideal preparation for a career in sport psychology where professionals require tertiary qualifications in sports science and psychology. The National body that accredits psychology training, the Australian Psychological Society (APS) has formed a College of Sport Psychologists (COSP) as one of its specialisations.

Description This program provides an umbrella framework including a core and a series of fields, each of which will meet requirements for membership of one specialist College of the Australian Psychological Society. This Counselling field prepares students for research and practice in counselling psychology through a combination of coursework, supervised practice, and research experience. Counselling psychologists assist individuals across a range of life challenging situations. These challenges may include issues concerning relationship problems, the maximization of personal goals, or guidance through distress. Counselling psychologists recognise and support the assumption that individuals need to actively formulate their own plans to reach life goals. Graduates are eligible for registration as psychologists in Queensland and for associate membership in the College of Counselling Psychologists.

PsychologyBachelor (Hons)

Content Area PSYC

Description The program focuses on producing graduates who are eligible to work as psychologists. This is achieved through the scientific study of the processes by which human behaviour is developed, manifested and modified. Throughout their degree students will engage with local services, institutions and societies to acquire knowledge from the community as their laboratory, and to develop problem solving competencies related to their areas of study. This program is similar to the Bachelor of Science (Psychology) and Bachelor of Science (Honours) (Psychology) in many respects. This program has more of a community and professional focus, and students who are accepted into the program do not have to compete for entry into an Honours program, provided that appropriate levels of academic performance are maintained through the first three years of study.

Psychology

Bachelor

Content Area PSYC

Description The Bachelor of Psychology is an integrated four-year sequence of study which provides a thorough education in the scientific discipline of psychology and introduces students to the applications of psychology. Students also gain some educational breadth by studying other disciplines at least to the second year level. Advanced theoretical level study in core areas and applied topics in psychology together with advanced research training is undertaken in the fourth year of the program. The program seeks to provide academic preparation of students in the scientist / practitioner model and equip graduates with the knowledge and skills for roles as provisionally registered psychologists. It provides graduates with a rigorous grounding in scientific methodology, critical thought and scholarly discourse.

Delivery Mode Internal

Duration 4 years

Indigenous

Entry Requirement Applicants for the BPsych must meet minimum university entrance requirements. Satisfactory achievement in TCE Science and / or Mathematics subjects is desirable, e.g., BIO5C Biology, MME5C Mathematics Methods or MAP5C Mathematics Applied, CHM5C Chemistry or PSC5C Physical Sciences, and may be required for students wishing to take first year elective units in Science and Health Science.

Doctor of Psychology in Counselling PsychologyPhD

Content Area PSYC

Description The Doctor of Psychology in Counselling Psychology is designed to enable graduates to manifest knowledge of theory and a range of professional skills that permit them to fit a variety of roles in work settings. During the time they are studying for the doctorate, students are expected to demonstrate research ability and to contribute to knowledge by independently planning and conducting an investigation. Both positivist and post-positivist methods are encouraged as properly representing the philosophy of a scientist-practitioner model of practice. Most importantly, perhaps, given the positions of responsibility taken by counselling psychology graduates in the community and the past history of relatively more experienced students taken into this degree, they are expected to show a mastery of particular methods, principles and procedures that fit them for leadership in their fields.

Social Science (Psychology) / Social Work

Bachelor

Content Area PSYC

Description The RMIT Bachelor of Social Work and the Bachelor of Social Science (Psychology) already enjoy high levels of respect and popularity in their own rights. Both offer highly vocational degrees with accreditation by the Australian Association of Social Workers (AASW) and the Australian Psychological Society (APS) respectively. There is, however, a demand in the human service industry for a qualification that combines elements of both of these programs. Social workers and psychologists often work side-by-side in organisations where a 'balancing act' of expertise is required from both areas.

Psychology (Interpersonal and Organisational)

Bachelor

Content Area PSYC

Description This is an APS accredited course. It provides an opportunity for students to combine an education in the discipline of psychology (via the accredited undergraduate psychology major) with a major that directly links important psychological interpersonal and organisational concepts with workplace settings. The course will: develop generic interpersonal and organisational skills, e.g.. listening, communicating, leading, interviewing, observing and decision-making, in students; enable students to acquire the basis for skilled interactions in a class setting and practise these through a fieldwork component; encourage reflection on such interactions with individuals and groups from a theoretical and psychological point of view.
